OVERVIEW

Degree: Master of Nursing

A master's in nursing prepares the nurse for opportunities to lead, educate, and manage others, including leading teams and one-on-one coaching. It provides the necessary knowledge and skills to help the nurse expand their practice with expert knowledge. A master's in nursing will provide opportunities for a nurse to advance their career and work in a variety of academic and practice settings within the nursing profession.

2 CONCENTRATIONS:

1. Nursing Education

Nursing Education program distinguishes itself by placing equal importance on teaching skills and clinical proficiency. It is a valuable specialization for nurses who are enthusiastic about influencing the future of nursing through education. Obtaining this degree enables nurses to motivate, direct, and mentor aspiring nurses, thereby significantly contributing to the quality of healthcare as a whole. The program's fundamental objective is to equip nurses with the necessary skills and knowledge to serve as instructors in academic and clinical fields.

2. Nursing Administration

The Nursing Administration program aims to prepare nurses for leadership positions in managing care and health services. The program provides knowledge in finance, human resource management, strategic planning, and organizational leadership to enhance skills in decision-making, policy implementation, and communication for efficient and effective nursing services
